The Early Mornings and Charm of White Dew

White Dew is the fifteenth solar term in the traditional Chinese calendar, usually occurring around September 7th or 8th. It signals the gradual cooling of the weather, and in the early mornings, dew often forms on grass leaves, like a gentle greeting from nature. In ancient times, people used White Dew as a marker to observe natural changes and to express hopes for health and a good life.

For example, when describing autumn scenery, you can include sentences like 'White Dew, autumn wind clear, morning light accompanies the dew' to let readers feel the coolness and serenity brought by the season.

In writing techniques, you can introduce such phrases by describing the landscape, such as morning fog, dew, or changing autumn leaves, and then naturally transition to emotions or themes. For instance, depicting a school morning scene: 'On the early morning playground, White Dew quietly falls on the grass tips, like tears
